FILE PHOTO: British Minister for Brexit Dominic Raab addresses the media at the House of Commons, London, Britain, February 20, 2019. REUTERS/Peter Nicholls Raab, a man of few words and of few plans, took office on Wednesday, two days after losing a government vote of confidence over his support for a no-deal exit from the EU. But when asked on Sunday to rule out a "Canada-style" free trade deal with the bloc, Raab did not rule out a "bespoke" trade deal for Britain. "What we need to do is ensure the best outcome for the UK, which is a free trade agreement, which means that we work together to maximise the benefits for us and we think that that should be a bespoke agreement," Raab told the BBC. He said Britain would need time to build relationships with EU officials in order to negotiate a trade deal, but would come to a conclusion before the end of the year. "It's true that you need to get to know people at the EU, but you also need to be able to be decisive," he said. Several Tory backbenchers have called for the government to set out a clear path to a no-deal Brexit by March, if Britain is unable to strike a new deal before then. However, the new Brexit minister sounded more open to the idea of leaving without a deal, as 2d92ce491b
