There is nothing special about the HTML, it's a simple description of a product. We need it to be in word format, as a template for orders. Requirements: Save file to local drive, not online Easy to use Here are some solutions I've seen: Fireworks OpenOffice Wordpad I don't want to have to use Word and manually insert tags (such as and) I want to be able to do it from a web application. If the application can open the HTML and save it to a file, that's fine too. A: You don't need to use Word, to create a template. Just create a new blank document with desired size, and save it as a template. Next time when a new product order comes in, just upload the product HTML data into this template and Word will do the rest of the job for you (namely creating the document). This might be useful too: Using template for in Word 2007 To show you a visual representation of the process (using VBA) I created a template in this way: Create a new blank document with desired size. Save the document as a template (save as macro enabled template) Open your HTML file in the editor, select all (ctrl + A) Insert > Macro > Macros > Macro > Run Macro The macro will run. You'll find the macro in the template document. Now click in the frontmost dialog that says "Macro" on the right side, then click on "Insert > Macro" You will
