Its graphical representation will tell your audience how the text is intended to appear. A good example of a layout I would recommend is Photoshop. There is a certain large font in the application where I work, for example (Arnold). Note: You may want to consider using a different font in addition to the large one. Here are some tips on picking out the right font for your design: - Larger is always better. - Keep it simple. - No abbreviations or symbols. - Avoid very thin or thick lines. The thinner the lines, the less distortion there will be on the printed page. - It is not realistic to expect every letter to print exactly the same. Distortion is inevitable. - Avoid using cursive letters in a print design. - Monospaced (all letters are the same width) or serif (have tails at the ends of the letters) fonts are best. Important! Once you are satisfied with the overall appearance of the font, be sure to get a copy of the line spacing. If there are different spaces between the lines, you should check for: - Too much space - Too little space - Poor alignment - Poor letter spacing - Curved or angled letters To do this: - Copy the entire file in which the font is placed and save it somewhere - Open up the text file in a text editor - Select all the text - Copy it to the clipboard - Open a new image in Photoshop and paste the text in - Adjust the spacing as desired. Another tool for checking line spacing: Adjusting the line spacing or line height in Photoshop: Select > Select All, press Cmd/Ctrl + I and change the line height to 1.0. The ability to detect and recognize different patterns is an important component
